This summer has helped reaffirm my desire to become an advocate for farmworker justice. I will never forget that I was once a farmworker myself and I want to continue serving them in every way possible. I want to tell other students, professors, and counselors the rewarding moments I shared serving those who feed us.

SECTION I: Introduction
PURPOSE OF THE INTO THE FIELDS MANUAL

Student Action with Farmworkers prepared this manual primarily for college students and faculty who are interested in mobilizing others on campus to learn about, educate, and work with migrant and seasonal farmworkers in your local area. Administrators, farmworker advocates, farmworkers, and Junior High and High School staff should also utilize the manual to develop opportunities for students to support farmworkers.

The manual outlines how to initiate a program on your campus, how to organize events and classes, how to coordinate a summer internship program, where to find support for your program, and how to ensure the sustainability of your program. Sample forms, training agendas, applications, as well as a directory of farmworker agencies and resources are also included in the Addendum Sections. SAF’s hope is that this manual can serve as a resource for campus-based programs providing support for farmworkers as they strive for a more just way of life.

Your campus can initiate a SAF chapter on your University by becoming a member. Member groups are entitled to certain benefits including SAF’s newsletter technical assistance, a reduced registration fee for SAF’s symposia, association with a nationally recognized non-profit, and action alerts about current farmworker issues. If your campus is not able to become an official chapter group, you can still take advantage of the resources in this manual and in our library. Please follow copyright regulations and credit Student Action with Farmworkers when you use our materials.

REALITIES OF MIGRANT AND SEASONAL FARMWORKERS

The availability of food products depends on a complex cycle of agricultural production and distribution. Migrant farmworkers play an important part in this cycle. Each year between three and five million farmworkers and their families leave their homes to follow the agricultural crops. Approximately 85 percent of all migrant farmworkers are minorities, most of whom are Latinos, African-Americans, Jamaicans, Haitians, Laotians, and Thais. Many workers live apart from their families for the season, but increasingly entire families travel together during a season.

The multi-billion dollar fruit and vegetable industry in the United States is dependent on the labor of migrant and seasonal farmworkers. More than 85 percent of the production of fruits and vegetables in the U.S. relies on migrant labor. Even though farmworkers’ contribution to the economy is substantial, the majority of them earn less than $7,500 annually.

Many farmworkers live in substandard and crowded housing that is provided by the farmer or is rented from private sources. In the absence of housing, farmworkers may be forced to sleep in tents, cars, ditches or open fields. In many cases, farmworkers do not have access to safe drinking water, bathing facilities or sanitation facilities.

The Department of Agriculture recognizes that agriculture is one of the most accident-prone industries in the United States. Compared to the occupational fatality rate for all private sector industries, which stands at 4.3 per 100,000 full-time employees, the rate for the category of agriculture, forestry and fishing is much higher at 23.9 per 100,000. The crops and the soil that farmworkers come in direct contact with are often treated with pesticides and chemical fertilizers. Some plants, such as tobacco and strawberries, exude chemicals that are toxic to humans and may cause reactions such as contact dermatitis. In some cases, farmworkers utilize water from runoff ponds and irrigation ditches containing harmful chemicals for drinking and washing. Occupational Safety and Health regulations require that employers of eleven or more farmworkers provide drinking water, hand washing facilities.

Please refer to Section VI for more information on becoming a SAF member chapter.
and toilets for their employees. In 1990, OSHA found field sanitation violations in 69 percent of its field inspections. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that 300,000 farmworkers suffer acute pesticide poisoning each year. Many cases are not reported and misdiagnosing of pesticide exposure can be common. Access to health care is an important consideration among the migrant farmworker population, especially since they are prone to exhibit health conditions that are attributable to the occupational hazards of their work.

Migrant children face many educational challenges due to poverty and constant migration. This accounts for only a 50 percent high school graduation rate among migrant children. Children who move often are two and a half times more likely to repeat a grade than children who do not move. There is a constant need for children to work in the fields in order to contribute to the family’s income.

The challenges faced by migrant farmworkers are numerous. Many agencies and organizations focusing on health issues, social services, education, legal services, community organizing and employment are providing needed services to farmworkers in many states. However, they often do not have the resources to serve the entire farmworker population in their area. This creates both a need and an opportunity for students to become involved in service, advocacy and organizing efforts with the farmworker population. By creating student-led initiatives on many campuses across the United States, young adults are having a positive impact on the people who grow the food we eat everyday.

RESPONSE OF STUDENT ACTION WITH FARMWORKERS

Mission

Student Action with Farmworkers is a non-profit organization created to build a network of campus-based projects focusing on farmworker issues. These projects include both summer internships and year-round opportunities for direct service, community education, advocacy and community organizing work. SAF serves students, who need assistance developing quality service-learning programs; farmworkers, one of the hardest working yet most marginalized populations in our society; and agencies and community groups serving farmworkers, who need greater human resources to carry out their work.

SAF’s primary program is the summer service-learning project Into the Fields (ITF). SAF publishes From the Ground Up, a newsletter which focuses on events and programs relating to farmworker issues. Staff members also provide technical assistance to campuses that offer, or are in the process of establishing, programs working with farmworkers. SAF offers campuses the opportunity to become chapter members.

The Into the Fields Model

Through the Carolina Into the Fields program, students from farmworker families and regional campuses work ten weeks each summer at agencies and organizations that work with farmworkers in North and South Carolina. Students are recruited from Appalachian State University, Central Piedmont Community College, Davidson College, Duke University, Guilford College, North Carolina Central University, North Carolina State University, Shaw University, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, University of South Carolina at Columbia, and other universities in North and South Carolina. Approximately one-third of the summer interns are from farmworking families themselves and are recruited through the College Assistance Migrant Programs in California, Idaho, Oregon, Pennsylvania and Texas.

During the summer, SAF interns work full-time in health agencies, legal services, migrant education programs, Migrant Head Start Centers, and community organizing groups. In the past, students working with farmworkers have organized community health fairs, developed literacy programs for migrant children, covered the farmworker population for local newspapers, provided training to lay health advisors about pesticide education, taught farmworkers skills necessary to pass a driver's exam, worked with Junior and High School farmworker students in a school retention program, and coordinated a Spanish-language television show.

Through service-learning classes, orientation and retreats, students learn about issues affecting farmworkers and develop skills necessary for initiating projects on their own campuses. Into the Fields interns provide services for farmworkers while promoting thoughtful action for social change. All interns participate in regular meetings throughout the summer in order to integrate service, learning, and reflection. When interns return to their campus, they are expected to organize educational events about farmworkers, coordinate volunteer opportunities for other students to work with farmworkers, integrate farmworkers and agricultural issues into related classes, initiate a farmworker service-learning course, and continue to support farmworkers living and working in their local areas.

Goals of the Into the Fields Program

- To provide farmworkers and their families with greater access to existing services
- To utilize student resources to develop new farmworker related projects
- To help create a supportive environment for the efforts of farmworkers themselves to improve their status in our society
- To link college students and farmworkers in order to develop better communication, understanding and support among people of different cultures
- To share the skills and knowledge necessary for campus and community organizing
- To increase student commitment to public service and positive social change
- To lay the foundation for a strong network of college student groups working with farmworkers for greater social justice
SECTION II: Initiating an Into the Fields Program

ASSESSING THE NEEDS ON CAMPUS

Before you initiate an Into the Fields program on your campus, you must first determine if there is a need to do so. You should not only assess the interest and commitment of students, faculty, and administrators on your campus, but should also consider the needs of local farmworkers and farmworker organizations as well.

Begin by meeting with allies on campus to discuss if there is a need for a campus-based group working with farmworkers and if so, what type of support exists for this type of project. You should also find out if there are other campuses in your state who are working with farmworkers. Coordinating inter-institutional projects with farmworkers is an excellent way to share resources and support. If there is a farmworker project on a nearby campus, invite one of their members to your initial meeting to give a presentation about how they got started, what difficulties they have experienced, and what successes they have had.

Begin assessing the needs on your campus by considering the following questions:

- Are there organizations or departments on campus already working with farmworkers?
- Is there a group of socially concerned students and faculty on campus?
- Is there a service-learning or community service center on campus?
- Are there classes offered which focus on agricultural issues?
- Are there quality internship opportunities for students on your campus?
- Are there human rights, social justice, or community development awareness events which are hosted by your campus?

EXPLORING LOCAL FARMWORKER ISSUES

Learn about the farmworker population in your area. Read articles, consult books, watch videos and most importantly talk to local farmworkers about their living and working conditions. Before planning events with farmworkers, it is important to know who the farmworkers are, when they are in your area, how long they stay in your area, and what problems, issues or events present opportunities for collaboration between your group and farmworkers.

The following questions can be helpful when researching farmworker issues in your area:

- Are there farmworkers who work or live close to your campus?
- Are there established local organizations which support farmworkers?
- Is the focus of the local organizations the same as that of students and faculty on your campus?
- Are the organizations meeting the needs of local farmworkers?
- Do the local farmworkers and organizations need student interns?
- Are the local organizations willing to work collaboratively with your college or university?
- What does your campus have to offer the farmworker community?
Contact local farmworker organizations and farmworker advocates to find out how the organizations are funded, whether they are government, religious or non-profit, and the focus of their work. Find out if they want to utilize student volunteers and interns and in what projects they can utilize assistance. When you are exploring local farmworker organizations, it is important to determine whether the organizations provide direct service to farmworkers, make policies which affect farmworkers, advocate for and with farmworkers, or support workers as they organize. The organizations’ missions and long-term goals can usually give you an indication of their focus. Of course, many organizations cannot be categorized easily, because they do work in more than one area. Working with different types of organizations can be beneficial to your project because you will be exposed to different philosophies regarding how to improve the living and working conditions of farmworkers.

DEVELOPING AN EFFECTIVE STRATEGY

After you have assessed the needs on your campus and within the community, you should develop a plan of action. Meet with interested campus and community leaders to answer the following questions. They should help you explore issues surrounding short and long term goals of your project.

- What are the goals of your project?
- Who will be involved with the project?
- What type of events will you coordinate?
- What community organizations will you work with?
- How much will this cost?
- Where will you get the funds to support the project?
- How will you sustain the project?

To initiate and sustain an Into the Fields program on your campus you will need to determine and obtain access to certain resources. Departments on your campus may be willing to provide your group with access to some of the following resources as in-kind support:

- Computer/typewriter
- Mailing address
- Office space
- Office supplies (e.g., paper, envelopes)
- Telephone
- Xerox machine
- Electronic mail

After a plan of action has been determined and you are able to locate appropriate resources, you should develop a timeline. A timeline is very important in making certain that good ideas lead to actual events. Below is a sample timeline for campus groups who plan to coordinate campus educational events, year-round volunteer opportunities, and summer internships. This sample timeline can be adapted to your campus and the academic calendar.

September

- Set up an information table about your farmworker campus group in campus activities fairs

October

- Develop a list of campus media contacts; write a press release/article about the formation of your group, activities planned or the experiences of summer interns and send to campus and local papers
- Develop a list of on-campus funds for interns, speakers, events, etc.
- Set up a campus group/committee meeting; contact former members and recruit new members
- Distribute internship information sheets, brochures, fact sheets about farmworkers
- Begin planning service-learning course(s) about farmworkers

November

- Hold a campus group meeting and an event (educational and fundraising)
- Advertise internship recruitment meetings (flyers, ads, speak at classes and meetings)
- Hold recruitment meetings (distribute applications, information sheets)
- Follow-up with potential applicants and class enrollees
- Coordinate with the professor teaching the service-learning course to finalize syllabus, speakers, readings, reserve room, and advertise for course(s)
December

- Hold campus group event (educational & fundraising)
- Follow-up with potential applicants
- Hold recruitment meetings
- Advertise and recruit for class
- Plan a service project for the class or for the campus group/committee

January

- Assist potential applicants with applications for summer internship
- Service-learning class begins (final recruitment, registration)

February

- Collect internship applications
- Meet with committee to interview applicants
- Make acceptance recommendations for internship program
- Plan individual and group fundraising activities for interns

March

- Selection of interns finalized
- Interns notify internship coordinator of acceptance
- Internship coordinator meets with interns on campus to discuss fundraising
- Sponsoring agencies interview interns
- Hold on-campus group fundraising/awareness event
- Spring break trip/day field trip/special project for class participants or committee

April

- Follow-up with individual and group fundraising
- End-of-the-year campus activity
- Interns’ placements decided

Students can learn an enormous amount about the country they live in, about the communities that are not so very far away from where they are getting an education. They can learn this way. Otherwise, they won’t learn at all.

Dr. Robert Coles

May

- Final campus meeting with interns
- Interns’ funds and forms due to the coordinator
- Meet with sponsoring organizations

June

- Orientation for all interns
- Interns begin work at sponsoring organizations
- Site-specific orientation at work-site
- Sponsoring organizations send a copy of contract to campus coordinator

July

- Mid Retreat for all interns
- Sponsoring organization sends mid-evaluation of intern(s) to campus coordinator

August

- Last day interns work at sponsoring organizations
- Final Retreat for all interns
- Sponsoring organization sends final evaluation of intern(s) to campus coordinator
- Campus coordinator meets with committee and supervisor to review sponsor and intern evaluations

INITIATING AN INTO THE FIELDS PROGRAM
SECTION III:
Mobilizing Students and Faculty on your Campus

Colleges and Universities provide an ideal setting for student involvement in issues concerning migrant and seasonal farmworkers. The interdisciplinary nature of the issues provides an opportunity for students in many departments and majors to work together in educational and volunteer activities.

College organizing begins with an active student organization that is recognized by the University community as representing the interests of a segment of the student population. Students can be very effective in their efforts to educate their peers and the community about the conditions of farmworkers. Active involvement with agencies and organizations that provide services to farmworkers is also an important aspect of campus organizing.

Refer to the Sample Syllabus and Sample Newspaper Ad in Addendum. Section III, p 27

Drawing from the experience of students who have worked in Universities through Student Action with Farmworkers, it is recognized that the creation of partnerships with University Departments, Professors, Administrators and established programs is an asset to any organizing effort. Institutions of higher learning are supportive of student initiatives that involve both learning and service. Departments may be able to provide in-kind support, such as office space, photocopies and access to a phone. Professors interested in the student group's work may provide invaluable advice, as well as referrals to resources and other interested individuals or organizations. Having a good rapport with administrators can benefit a student organization since they may become advocates for the group at a University-wide level and have access to institutional funds. Creating partnerships with other student organizations is also critical in getting other students involved in the campus organizing effort.

A summary of possible actions that can be taken by students to raise awareness and become involved with issues affecting farmworkers is included in this section.

ORGANIZING A CAMPUS GROUP/COMMITTEE

The key to successfully implementing a farmworker awareness program on your campus is to not try to do it alone. If an on-campus group/committee that is concerned with farmworker issues does not exist at your school, then the first step is to establish one. Having a visible student group that organizes activities to raise awareness of farmworker issues is a strong asset to other activities such as the development of internship opportunities, fundraising efforts, and establishment of service-learning classes. Contact your student community service center, student government, student development office or Campus Y to find out information about setting up a student led group and soliciting funds for the group.

Students should contact a wide range of people in the community and the University when recruiting members for a campus group or a committee. Consider contacting the following:

- Community service interns
- Farmworkers or former farmworkers
- Campus volunteer center or service-learning center staff
- Leaders or members of campus volunteer groups
• Political groups on campus
• Religious groups
• Ethnic and cultural groups
• Fraternities/sororities
• The Dean of Student Life, Student Affairs or Campus Life
• Residential Life staff Resident Advisors
• Leaders of your student government or dorms
• Your friends
• Staff of community organizations
• Administrators and alumni
• Faculty of departments such as Public Policy, Sociology, Anthropology, History, Education, Spanish, Latin American Studies, Social Work, Public Health, Environmental Studies, and Multi-disciplinary Studies

PLANNING CAMPUS EVENTS

There are many ways that college students and faculty can become involved in the lives of migrant and seasonal farmworkers. There may be farmworkers in your school’s area during the academic year who may be unemployed or temporarily employed in another industry. Work with nearby agencies to set up volunteer and/or internship opportunities for interested students. There are usually many needs which could be met during the off-season. Develop a list of local volunteer opportunities with farmworkers and distribute the contacts to campus group members and faculty interested in agricultural, poverty, and social justice issues.

Some ideas for projects that can take place throughout the year are outlined below:

Organize Volunteer Opportunities with Local Farmworker Organizations

Education

• Organize a tutoring program for migrant children in area schools or labor camps.
• Organize a pen-pal program, matching college students with younger migrant students.
• Create an adult literacy project or teach English as a Second Language to farmworkers.

• Set up field trips for farmworker students enrolled in a migrant education program to tour your campus or to attend a play on your campus.

Health

• Send volunteers to a health clinic to serve as translators or outreach workers.

• Work with your university’s medical school or student clinic to set up a mobile clinic for farmworkers.

Legal

• Set up opportunities with legal services programs for students to translate their materials into Spanish, serve as interpreters in court, or transport farmworkers to legal hearings.

• Work with law students at your university to offer paralegal work to legal services programs which work with farmworkers.

Community Organizing

• Support farmworkers who are trying to organize making phone calls, providing transportation, or holding fundraisers.

• Educate your campus about boycotts called by local farmworker groups, circulate petitions, organize leafletting in grocery stores and the campus cafeteria, and organize marches.

Other

• Plan a spring or fall break trip to work with farmworkers in another area.

• Hold a food or clothing drive for community groups which work with farmworkers.

• Coordinate an event or service project with another school.

• Take field trips to the agencies which work with farmworkers, a farm, a packing shed, or a processing plant.

• Participate in a gleaning project and donate the food to an agency which provides emergency food assistance to farmworkers.

• Repair migrant housing at a local labor camp.

Sponsor Awareness Raising Events

• Hold education/awareness events on your campus or in the community. Have speakers present to classes or hold special presentations, show films about farmworkers, or lead discussions at a pizza party about issues facing farmworkers. Participate in campus-wide events such as Earth Day, International Week or Human Rights Day by having an information table or providing a speaker who will address issues involving farmworkers. Participating in an established campus event guarantees you an audience. Also, find out about speaker series on campus and propose to have a speaker address farmworker issues.

• Write articles about your work for the school magazine or newspaper.

• Sponsor a photo and writing exhibit from students’ or previous intern’s work in a visible place on campus (e.g., the library, student union).

• Display an art or photo exhibit from migrant students’ work.

• Publish documentary work including art, photographs, oral history interviews and essays done by migrant students and college students.

• Help farmworkers organize a festival or farmworker appreciation week.

• Organize a farmworker awareness week on your campus.

• Invite farmworkers and students to share experiences at a local restaurant.

Coordinate Advocacy Projects

• Begin an advocacy campaign about farmworker issues. Write letters to members of Congress, write editorials in the newspapers, have information tables on your campus, or hold hearings about farmworker issues.

• Find out about national or regional boycotts of companies originated from labor disputes due to poor working conditions for farmworkers. Educate others about the campaigns and write letters in support of the boycotts.

• Monitor the activities of the government agencies responsible for enforcing farmworker laws, such as housing inspections or field sanitation.
Perform Research Projects

* Work on Participatory Action Research projects for farmworker agencies. For example, perform a study of agricultural land ownership or pesticide use affecting farmworkers in your area.

* Choose topics related to farmworkers for assigned papers in classes.

DEVELOPING AND MAINTAINING SERVICE-LEARNING COURSES

In order for students to have a true "service-learning" experience, it is important to provide a formal structure in which service and learning takes place. Most learning emanates from service itself, but lacks a forum for personal reflection or the opportunity to examine the root causes of problems in our communities. Establishing a service-learning course focused primarily on farmworker issues or integrating a service component with farmworkers into an already existing class is a way to provide space for both service and learning to occur simultaneously within an academic institution. The goals of the service-learning project are to educate students about problems facing farmworkers, discuss policy issues and potential solutions, and enable students to work with farmworkers directly.

A service project with farmworkers can easily be added to already existing classes. The key is to find classes which are related to farmworker issues; for example, classes on rural poverty, migration, Latin American Studies, Economics, Anthropology, History or Sociology. It can also be possible to approach a professor who is interested in farmworker issues about starting a new course on the topic. Inform them that there are resources available such as sample syllabi and that students might be interested in assisting the professor in coordinating and advertising the course.

An effective program allows time and space for participants to articulate clear service and learning goals (e.g., what is to be accomplished and what is to be learned). The most effective campus based service-learning projects are linked to the curriculum and require faculty involvement. Finding one supportive faculty member can often lead to others being involved. Be sure to publicly thank the faculty who support you; this may encourage other faculty to be curious about what they are doing.

Content and Syllabus

Service-learning courses should contain a mixture of films, speakers, readings, discussions, and group activities. If you are integrating a farmworker service component into an already existing class, talk to the professor about assisting him/her by providing articles, videos, and books which focus on farmworker issues, but are relevant to the existing coursework. Combine factual, policy-oriented materials with stories of individual farmworkers or families. Students in the class who are volunteering in a farmworker agency should be asked to lead discussions when the week's assignment is related to their service project.

Class Projects/Direct Service Component

Service project(s) should be a requirement for the course. The service component can be either an individual or group project, but preferably both. Students can volunteer at an agency which works directly with farmworkers each week for a specified amount of time, groups can sponsor a weekend service event, or students can do a research project for a farmworker advocacy group. The students in the class should coordinate group projects with the existing campus group. Because some service projects require a greater time commitment than others, it is important to be flexible with the time requirement.

We can study policy in the classroom, we can study solutions that have been made up in Washington or a state capital, but until you get out in the area where the solutions are being affected, you can't see how they impact the patient, the people who are the reason for the services.

DAVID THOMAS, SAF 1990 INTERN

MOBILIZING STUDENTS AND FACULTY ON YOUR CAMPUS
Speakers

Invite a wide variety of speakers with different perspectives and opinions to the class. Make sure to ask the speakers to discuss a specific issue such as immigration, health, or child care, as opposed to the general topic of “migrant farmworkers.” Discuss your expectations for the presentation with speakers before they arrive. Give the speakers the reading materials assigned to the students regarding the topic(s) they will address. Be sure to write thank-you letters to the speakers. If your budget allows, provide a small honorarium, pay for their travel costs, or provide dinner before or after the class with the students.

Prepare a list of local farmworkers and farmworker advocates who are available to speak to classes, clubs, and at special events. The following list provides some suggestions for speakers:

- Farmworkers
- Legal services attorneys or paralegals
- Community organizers, union organizers

Reflection Ideas

Service-learning courses must include an academically challenging written component, as well as opportunities for students to reflect on their service experience. It is important to offer a diversity of written assignments and reflection exercises, because not all students reflect in the same way. Below are some sample assignments.

- Require students to keep a weekly journal of their reactions to speakers, films, readings, or their volunteer experiences.
- Ask students to write a brief essay exploring their reasons for choosing to enroll in the class and/or wanting to participate in an internship program.
- Lead students in guided journal entries; have them write letters to parents, friends, professors that reflect “what I am learning, how I am growing, how I am changing” through this service project.
- Assign short, bi-weekly reaction papers.
- Have students set learning objectives and personal objectives at the beginning of the service experience. Revisit the objectives at various times throughout the semester.
- Have students pair up and interview each other with the following questions: Can you think of a time when you were surprised by something in your service? Did you ever suddenly look at a situation or an issue in a way you hadn't before? When did you realize that you needed answers to some new questions? How do you plan to find answers to these questions?
SECTION IV:
Coordinating a Summer Internship

A n internship program can provide students with the opportunity to become involved and committed to public service and social action. Interns can develop projects that are mutually beneficial for farmworkers and themselves. The opportunity for students to assume leadership positions outside the University setting can lead them to explore new academic and career options and may change their outlook for the future.

DEVELOPING RELATIONSHIPS WITH SPONSORING ORGANIZATIONS

A key aspect of coordinating a summer internship is to create partnerships with local agencies and organizations that already work with farmworkers so that programs will not be duplicated and resources are shared. These organizations are in many cases understaffed and can benefit greatly from the work of motivated and committed interns. Contact your local Health Department, Migrant Education Program, Head Start Center, Legal Services Agency, religious organizations and other entities that work with farmworkers to determine their need and willingness to participate in your internship program.

Organizations or groups which support farmworkers usually know about and work with each other. Therefore, if you have difficulty locating agencies, consult the organization you do have contact with for other groups. It is always a good idea to meet with someone at the organization, instead of simply speaking with them on the phone.

In order to develop a successful relationship with sponsoring organizations, a staff member at those agencies must be willing to serve as an intern supervisor. Supervisors must work with their interns to develop work plans that consider the interests of the agency as well as the students' Once you have located possible sponsoring organizations in your area, send them a cover letter introducing your program and a Sponsoring Organization Application Form. The application process will help you

It would be impossible not to learn and grow from a summer experience like this. My mind was opened up to so many new ideas and situations and I can feel the difference in me and how I relate to other people. For the summer, I escaped the reality of a college student and entered into an entirely different reality I had never before known about—that of the farmworker community—where I witnessed the incredible dignity and beauty that comprise the human spirit.

Jennifer Winston, 1992 intern

formalize your relationship with the agency, as well as allow you to appropriately match students with agencies. It is a good idea to obtain a copy of the sponsoring organization's volunteer liability policy before a student begins working with that agency. This can preclude any future problems if a student gets injured while volunteering at that agency.

Before interns begin their work with the sponsoring organizations, it is helpful to hold a required Sponsoring Organization Meeting. Many organizations are not accustomed to working with students and can benefit from a meeting where expectations and responsibilities of interns and the agencies are discussed. At the meeting provide sponsoring organizations with a folder containing information about the internship program, important dates, and forms such as your program's Grievance

Procedure and an Evaluation form for the meeting. During the meeting be sure to review the agenda, Sponsoring Organization Folder, and the Internship Participant Responsibilities. Also, allow time for a question and answer period. It is helpful to have someone who has hosted interns before to lead a session on “Preparing for Student Interns” Hearing real stories from another agency staff person allows the sponsoring organization participants to realize that there are others already working with student interns. Testimonies from experts can be reassuring for hesitant sponsors. Some questions which may be useful to discuss during that time are:

- What type of projects are summer interns best at?
- How much supervision do interns need?
- At what points during the summer do interns need more attention?
- What type of support can supervisors offer (that is not work-related)?
- When are supervisors not responsible for interns?
- What lessons have you learned by working with interns or student volunteers?

Certain circumstances may arise over the course of the summer which could pose problems between sponsoring organization supervisors and interns. The re-enactment of possible scenarios by sponsors can provide an opportunity for discussion and problem-solving. Divide supervisors into small groups, have each group discuss one of the following scenarios, and then have the group report back to all the participants.

Always Around Intern

Intern’s housing situation is messy. She does not like the person she is living with and thus avoids going home. She gets to work early and stays late. She never wants to leave the office. She even begins asking you and other staff if she can hang out at your house for a while after work and on the weekends. What do you do?

I Don’t Feel Qualified Intern

You have interviewed the intern, seen her resume, and know she is very qualified to complete the project you have in mind for her. The project is just what she said she has always wanted the chance to do. Yet when the time for the intern to begin the project comes, she panics. She does not feel qualified to do what you expect. Her self-initiating character crumbles under pressure. You do not have anyone else to coordinate this project; you were depending on her. What do you do?
Homesick Intern
Intern does not get along with other intern in area. He does not meet other friends and seems to be lonely. Intern is married and misses his spouse back home. Intern seems very depressed and is not enthusiastic about work. What do you do?

Not Your Intern
Intern is placed with another organization in your area, but works on a project your organization is coordinating with the intern at your agency. Intern does not follow the “policies” of your agency and is disruptive in your agency. Intern does not feel that you have authority over her because you are not her supervisor and this is not her official placement. What do you do?

Wrong Foot Intern
Intern starts the summer on the wrong foot. His housing was not quite what he had expected, after one day with children he is not quite sure he wants to teach after all, and well, he has never lived in a rural area before.
His first weekend in Off-The-Beaten Path, USA, does not compare to the limelight he loves in New York City.
What do you do?

It is important to be in contact with the sponsoring organizations throughout the summer to monitor the progress of interns, respond to any difficulties or problems promptly and maintain partnerships with the sponsoring organizations. Schedule at least one site visit for each intern at their work site when you can meet with their supervisor and co-workers, and have the interns share current projects. After the internship program comes to a close, request the organizations’ input for next year’s program. Utilizing a written evaluation will prove useful for you when you begin planning for the next year’s internship program. Agencies may also be able to designate funds in their budget to support the work of an intern the following year. Send sponsoring organizations a follow-up letter requesting them to include your program in their budget and talk to them about the possibility of co-writing grants and continuing to work together in the future.

RECRUITING AND SELECTING INTERNS
While you are continuing to develop relationships with sponsoring organizations, you should develop and distribute an internship application for students. Keep in mind the qualifications, expectations, and guidelines you would like interns to follow and set program dates and deadlines.
Also decide on the application process, interview process;
whether you will charge an application fee and what forms should be required, such as a personal statement, resume and/or letters of recommendation. You must also determine costs and sources of income for the internship.
Issues you should consider include: if you will require interns to raise funds for part of their living expenses, if you will provide housing for interns during the summer, if you will provide interns with a post-service scholarship when they finish the internship program, and whether students will be able to receive academic credit for the internship.

It is important to recruit a large and diverse pool of applicants for the internship program. Recruiting applicants from a variety of ethnic, racial, and religious backgrounds, as well as varied ages, gender, economic levels, and those with disabilities will add to the experience. Participation of interns from farmworker families will be an asset to your program. Bringing different perspectives to the project will also provide a variety of skills to the sponsoring organizations. Do not just recruit your friends, people from your clubs, or people in your discipline. Keep in mind that students who speak Spanish, or a language widely spoken by farmworkers in your area, will have a more rewarding internship experience and should therefore be considered priority candidates.

Introductory information sessions can be useful in recruiting summer interns, raising awareness about farmworker issues, and getting students motivated to become active on campus. Set different dates and times for the recruitment meetings so that more people will be able to attend. On all the publicity materials, have a name and number to contact for further information.
Be sure and follow-up with those who call or come to the meetings. You may also want to hold individual meetings with interested applicants.
PLANNING THE SUMMER INTERNSHIP

A meaningful internship program should integrate a service-learning component throughout the summer. The internship should begin with an orientation where students can learn about issues affecting farmworkers, discuss issues that they might face at work, and have an opportunity to interact with other students. A Mid-Retreat and a Final Retreat provide opportunities for reflection, sharing experiences and problem-solving. Invite farmworkers and guest speakers to the orientation and retreats. A visit to a local farm can provide an opportunity to discuss the realities of agriculture in your area.

During your initial orientation, it is very important to clarify interns’ responsibilities and review how they should handle difficult situations if and when they arise. One very effective method for discussing difficulties is through role playing. Below are examples of situations which SAF interns have encountered in the past. They should provide excellent discussion starters for interns from your campus.

• You have only been at your worksite for two weeks and you are already exhausted! Your supervisor works 13 and 14 hours per day and expects you to do the same. You have hinted about how tired you are and you would think your supervisor would notice your yawns. You want to please your supervisor and you love the work, but you are just too tired. What can you do?

• Your supervisor constantly asks you to do small favors for him... “go get me some coffee; could you find that file; would you grab the phone?” You do not mind doing small favors, but these constant interruptions are interfering with your projects. You are starting to feel like a secretary. What can you do?

• Lucy, one of your co-workers is so excited that you are working in her agency this summer. She asks you to go to the movies on the weekends and out for beers everyday after work. You like Lucy but you had rather spend time with other interns or just have quiet time by yourself. You do not want to hurt Lucy’s feelings but you need your space. What can you do?

• You have been at your agency for three weeks and you still have no workplan. You have asked your supervisor to write a workplan with you, but she is always too busy and seems overworked. On your first day of work, your supervisor said that your project was to set up a rural health clinic in a new area. You are overwhelmed and have not received any further direction. What can you do?
You do not get along with the other intern in your area and have not met any other friends yet. You desperately miss your friends and family back home. This depression is beginning to affect your work. You simply do not have the energy or enthusiasm you had before the summer program began. What can you do?

One of your co-workers seems to be flirting with you. She makes little comments about the way you dress and the way you laugh. You are starting to feel uncomfortable and the other workers are starting to gossip. What can you do?

Your supervisor always talks about Mark, the intern from last summer. Mark worked extra hours, was fluent in three languages, and did everything perfectly. You feel you are being compared to the “dream intern” even though you feel that you are doing excellent work. What can you do?

You are assigned to work with another intern in your area on a project at her worksite. There is a discrepancy in how your friend’s agency handles a particular situation and how your agency does so. The other intern’s supervisor tells you to do a specific task which your supervisor had previously said that you should not do. What can you do?

The internship and leadership development program exposes the students to the realities of the workers and to the oppressive situation in which they must live. You are developing powerful islands of persons who are supportive of justice for farmworkers amidst a great ocean of persons who are uninformed and/or indifferent. This is the kind of base that must be developed for the larger public to support the changes that are needed.

COORDINATING A SUMMER INTERNSHIP

REFLECTING ON THE INTERNSHIP

Regardless of the interns’ placements, fields of study, or reasons for participating in the internship, they should be required to reflect on their experiences. Assisting interns to reflect on what they are learning and doing during the summer, as well as assisting them in understanding the bigger picture regarding the social and economic realities of farmworkers, is a difficult but necessary task. One way to ensure that all the interns will participate in reflection is to offer a number of different reflection exercises. Interns should be required to reflect regularly during their internship through journaling or discussions, participate in special reflection exercises during retreats, as well as produce a final reflection or documentary project.

Providing interns with guided journal questions can keep interns focused on what they are learning and doing that is specific to this internship. Below are journal questions which interns can use to not only reflect on what they are doing during the summer, but to prepare them to begin thinking about how they can educate others about farmworkers when the internship is over. The more you have access to interns’ journal entries, the more aware you will be of problems or successes that arise.

- Identify and describe in detail an incident which occurred early in your internship. Then describe your thoughts and feelings about the incident, your perceptions of others’ thoughts, and how this event affected your co-workers and/or your work.

- What are the challenges you are facing in your internship? How will you meet these challenges in the remainder of the summer?

- Have you been surprised by something during this internship thus far? If so, write about when you suddenly looked at a situation or issue in a way you had not done so before.

- If you wanted to get personally involved in solving a problem in the community in which you are working, what steps would you take?

- Are there some guidelines for community involvement that you think people should know in order to be effective in community action? What skills or knowledge are necessary to be effective?

- What have you learned from your service that makes you a more effective participant in the community?
• Write a letter to the intern who will be working in your agency next summer. Explain to them how to be best prepared for their work, what frustrations they might encounter, and what project at your agency you wish you would have been more involved with. Give a copy to the intern in this placement next year.

• Has the way you think about poverty, discrimination and injustice changed over the course of the summer?

• Has your internship sparked any new, or deepened any of your existing, academic or career interests?

• Write a letter to your parents, friends, or professors which explains what you are learning and how your views are changing through this internship.

• What, overall, do you feel you accomplished this summer? How do you feel about yourself and your abilities now that you’ve completed the internship? Have your goals for the next year and/or your life changed and in what ways?

• Write an article for a local newspaper explaining the conditions of farmworkers in your area and what you are doing with and for farmworkers through this internship.

• Write an article for your campus or hometown paper explaining what you did during the summer.

• Write a plan for educating other students and/or members of your home community about farmworkers, agribusiness, and/or rural poverty.

Interns should be provided with training and technical assistance throughout the summer to help them complete their project. Requiring interns to present their project at the Final Retreat or during the following semester will make them take the projects more seriously. Interns should be aware of the need to respect the privacy of farmworkers whom they are interviewing and photographing. Students should ask farmworkers to grant them written permission to make public their photographs to avoid problems in the future. Your internship program may also want to request permission from interns to use their materials for educational purposes.

Some examples of documentary projects are:

• Journailling

• Writing poems, essays, short stories, or books about their experience

• Interviewing farmworkers, co-workers, farmers

• Taking photos or slides of the fields, agricultural corporations and/or housing conditions

• Recording oral histories

• Producing videos

Documentary Projects are great end-of-the-internship projects through which students can share their experiences and the stories of farmworkers with others. These materials can be used as educational tools for presentations, articles and exhibits that can reach a large audience.
OVERVIEW OF PARTICIPANT RESPONSIBILITIES: Internship Coordinator, Interns, Sponsoring Organizations

Internship Coordinator

To recruit talented students to participate as interns and provide materials, videos, applications, and trainings to raise student awareness of farmworker issues.

To locate adequate financial support (and housing) for interns.

To make appropriate placements of students with participating organizations.

To provide an intensive orientation and on-going opportunities for reflection and training for interns about farmworker issues and their responsibilities as interns.

To keep a copy of the summer contract signed by the coordinator, sponsoring organization and intern. The interns’ summer work plan and the sponsoring agency’s volunteer liability policy should be attached to the contract.

To be in communication with both interns and sponsors through site visits, phone calls, and letters in order to evaluate progress, answer questions and solve problems.

To review interns’ journal entries and documentary projects.

Interns

To meet with your supervisor to finalize summer job descriptions and weekly workplan. Interns should discuss their personal goals for the summer, what type of work would be of most interest to them, what skills they can provide, and what hours they can work.

To keep a copy of the summer contract signed by the coordinator, sponsoring organization and intern. The interns’ summer work plan and the sponsoring agency’s volunteer liability policy should be attached to the contract.

To be present at work on those days and hours which are agreed upon at the beginning of the summer, except when permission is granted to alter this schedule, and to abide by the policies of the sponsoring organization. Interns should work 35-40 hours per week at their sponsoring organization.

To attend all orientations, trainings and retreats.

To meet with other interns regularly to discuss the summer internships. Interns can also be required to prepare group presentations for the Trainings/Retreats.

To keep a weekly journal, participate in regular reflection meetings with other interns, and complete a documentary project.

To meet weekly with your supervisor in order to maintain clear lines of communication. It is the responsibility of the interns to tell their supervisors if they are not providing sufficient supervision or guidance during the summer.

To complete evaluation forms of the orientation, trainings and the overall internship program.

Sponsoring Organizations

To provide the internship coordinator and interns with a copy of the job description developed by the agency.

To locate adequate financial support (and housing) for interns.

To orient interns to the agency’s policies, mission, expectations, and staff, as well as to other agencies in the area. To discuss expectations, proper dress, work hours, etc. to help alleviate future misunderstandings.

To use the interns’ abilities and interests to enhance ongoing projects or to initiate a new project.

To keep a copy of the summer contract signed by the coordinator, sponsoring organization and intern. The interns’ summer work plan and the sponsoring agency’s volunteer liability policy should be attached to the contract.

To meet weekly with interns in order to maintain clear lines of communication. Supervisors must be aware of the daily activities of interns should any problems arise.

To complete evaluation forms of the interns’ performance and the overall internship program.
SECTION V: Fundraising

In order to initiate an effective year-round and summer internship program, you must determine the cost of the program and how you will fundraise the needed amount. Be clear in your own mind about why you are asking for money. Remember that every dollar you raise will be well-spent, and by asking people to sponsor you, you are giving them an opportunity to invest in something worthwhile. Many people regularly give money to charitable organizations. In fact, 85-90% of all charitable giving in the US is from individuals (over $70 billion a year), compared to only about 5% each from foundations and corporations. Often people donate money to causes they support, but they are not really sure where it goes. They may be delighted with the chance to support your work and to hear personally how their dollars have made a difference.

People give money for many reasons. They might give because they are concerned, intrigued, because they feel guilty, because giving makes them feel good, or because it may be tax-deductible. But no matter what the underlying motives are, the only way they will give is by being asked. So first, conquer the fear of asking. Take an honest and critical look at why you are raising money and where the money is going, and feel good about fundraising to support farmworkers.

If you are coordinating a summer internship program, we suggest that the participating interns be required to help fundraise their expenses. Most of the agencies where interns will be working cannot afford to pay interns or will only be able to contribute a small amount.

Fundraising benefits the students because:

- It helps students articulate their motivations for participating in the project.

Setting a fundraising goal per intern or for the entire group from your campus is necessary. You need to assure students that the money can and will be raised. One of the main roles of the coordinator is to offer support and encouragement to the students as they fundraise.

Ways to ensure that the interns meet their fundraising goals:

- Prepare a fundraising packet for the interns. Include the list of scholarships that are available for summer service-learning internships on your campus, the names of businesses or faculty who have given in the past and sample solicitation letters.

MAKING A FUNDRAISING PLAN

Make a budget with estimated expenses for the entire internship. Include food, transportation, intern expenses, post-service scholarships if awarded, and miscellaneous expenses. Your budget will vary depending on how many events you coordinate and how many student interns you have. You might also be able to receive in-kind support such as office space, use of a phone and fax and e-mail.

Make a timeline to focus your fundraising goals before the internship. For example, we will raise $____ by May 1, and $____ by June 1.

Break down your total expenses so you know how much you need and from what sources you are going to get it. Review the example budget which includes costs for hosting one campus educational event per semester and for coordinating summer internships for five students.

FUNDRAISING
When you're ready to fundraise, you should send letters, make phone calls and hold personal meetings. As you approach people, use your judgment to strike a balance between courtesy and persistence. There is no absolutely right way to do it, but remember: written information is influential, personal contact is even more influential, and face to face meetings are generally the most profitable. But, you won't get support unless you ASK!

IDENTIFYING FUNDRAISING POSSIBILITIES

Think of ALL possible donors and organizations you could possibly contact for support of any kind. Brainstorm with parents, siblings, grandparents, friends, and mentors. Remember support is not just financial. You can get in-kind support. Be creative! Remember that this is an opportunity to let people know what you're doing and to invite them to be a part of it. Make a list of 100 people that you know. They could be family, friends, faculty and staff at your university, employers, members of clubs and organizations, churches or synagogues and school teachers. Think very BROADLY. Contact those people who you believe would support you.

Some individual and group fundraising ideas which have worked on campuses which SAF works with are listed below:

- Encourage students to approach friends, family, local businesses, churches, and civic clubs in their hometown and where they are in school.
- Ask the university to provide funds to match the money raised by the students.
- Contact your student union/student government about left-over or discretionary money or the possibility of introducing a proposal for funding.
- Check to see if a portion of student or faculty fees can be used to support internships.
- Request funds from the University's President/Chancellor or other administrator's discretionary fund.
- Ask the campus chapel/chaplain's office to take up a special collection for you.
- Approach campus organizations such as fraternities, sororities, and dorms.
- Write individual or group letters to faculty, alumni, and staff.

- Show movies, hold a concert, dance or a talent show and charge admission.
- Have a carwash, book sale, or a walk/jog/rock-a-thon.
- Ask a local farmer to donate produce, such as apples, and sell it on campus.
- Hold a raffle. Collect donated items and services from local businesses. Many businesses that will not donate money will donate dinner for two or movie passes.
- Approach corporations or small businesses in your community.
- Hold an art or photography exhibit and auction featuring works by farmworkers, students and/or community members.

Hints on writing letters

You will be surprised how well letters work when presenting your internship to others. Keep the following in mind when writing:

- Send an appropriate letter to your contacts. A letter sent to someone whom you know personally will be less formal than a letter to a company or business. Tell them why this is important to you and your education. People who give are more eager to donate if they find a link between you and the work you will be doing.
- Keep your letter brief and to the point. Use a one to two page letter with an introduction, body, and conclusion, telling the sender about you, the program, and its importance to you.
- Avoid guilt-creating letters that focus on the problems of the work that you will be doing. Instead, focus on the real benefits of the program.
- When asking for support from companies, businesses, or organizations, remind them that you can give presentations, slide shows or send a brief written report about your project.
- Reestablish ties with people you have lost contact with. Tell them what you have been doing in the past few years or months. You should tell them about any volunteer or work experiences your group has coordinated and share your future plans. This should also be done with people you do not know well so that they will know a little more about your program.
In the letter request to set up a time to meet with your potential donor. Ask them to reply to your letter to set up a time to meet.

At the end of the letter when you discuss their donation, cite a specific amount that you think is reasonable for that person or organization to give. Avoid saying things like “any small amount that you can give” you want to make them think big.

Hints on phone calls and personal meetings

The purpose of calling and meeting a person is to establish a relationship with them so that they feel more comfortable in funding your project. The most important point when doing this is to review the facts about your program, know how much you are asking for and research the person and organization whom you will meet.

The Phone Call

As a follow up to your letter, it is best that you call your potential donor to set up a meeting.

- Take some time and think about who you're going to call and what you're going to say. Think about your relationship with this person in order to connect them with what you are doing. Remember people who donate give to people, not causes.

- It's crucial that you sound organized and confident on the phone. We suggest role-playing the phone calls with someone before making the call.

- The purpose of the phone call is to set a meeting. Avoid making a request for money over the phone. It's easier for them to say no over the phone than it is face to face. A one on one meeting requires their full attention. In addition, it's much harder to be creative on the phone when trying to explore other options than just yes or no.

- When you ask for a meeting time, always indicate how long you expect the meeting to last (never longer than 45 minutes). The people who you will be talking to are busy, and they need to know that you are not going to tie up their entire day.

- If you really must make a request over the phone, be crisp, confident, and concise. Know beforehand the specific amount you are going to ask for or simply tell them your fundraising goal and ask them to give what they feel is appropriate.

- You should never end a phone conversation, regardless of their answer before asking them for suggestions of who else can support you.

The Meeting

- Be personable. It helps to establish a rapport with the person with whom you are meeting.

- Keep your goals in mind and know the specific amount that the person or organization can give. Depending upon the relations you have established, you should know to either ask them for full or partial support of your fundraising goal.

- You should remind them of the benefits that they can receive in return for giving and what you intend to do for them if they give. If they ask something of you in return, it should be reasonable for you. It is NOT good to accept a donation and in return agree to do something that you know you cannot do.

- No matter what the consequences of their decision, always say thank you. If so inclined, ask them why they cannot provide support and where else you can seek funding.

Fundraising is hard, but it is not impossible. It takes creativity, perseverance, and luck. If you do not raise your goal, do not be discouraged. Just try approaching your contacts in different ways.

Always say THANK YOU in as many ways as you can. People like to feel appreciated and good about their contributions. Send a letter when you receive their check, as well as after the event or internship they helped support. Each time, explain the importance of their giving and how they have made a difference. Share stories of your experience. Also, invite the donor to your events on campus, so they can continue to feel connected to the project and to campus issues.
CONTACTING SERVICE-LEARNING FUNDERS

In order to initiate or maintain service-learning course(s) related to farmworkers on your campus, you need to sustain financial support specifically for the service-learning component of your program. In addition, many local farmworker advocates will speak to your class for free. SAF can offer technical assistance to its member chapters and can provide access to resources such as books, slides, videos, and articles.

Integrating a service component with farmworkers into an existing class is much less expensive than initiating a new course because the instructor’s salary is already covered. You should assist faculty who need additional funding. You should try to locate funding on your campus to support instructors’ salaries, utilize graduate or undergraduate students as instructors, or help faculty locate funds from outside sources. Below is a list of national organizations which provide either funds or technical assistance to those who are trying to initiate service-learning on their campus.

Campus Compact
The Project for Public and Community Service
Box 1975, Brown University, Providence, RI 02912
401-863-1119; 401-863-3779 fax
compact@brownvm.brown.edu

Campus Compact is a national coalition of college and university presidents with the mission to expand opportunities for public and community service in higher education. It provides money for its member campuses to support the integration of service and study, growth of campus-based mentoring, development of state compacts and collaboration on issues of service and community. Check to see if your campus is a member and/or if funds are available for your campus.

VA COOL
Virginia Campus Outreach Opportunity League
RC Box 26, University of Richmond, Richmond, VA 23173
804-289-8963, 804-287-6584 fax

VA COOL is a network of colleges and universities that promotes campus-based community service. The Integration Grant Program awards funds on a competitive basis to institutions for community service and service-learning programs.

Break Away
PO Box 6026, Station B, Nashville, TN 37235
615-343-0385; 615-343-3255 fax
breakaway@ctrax.vanderbilt.edu

Break Away is a non-profit organization that serves as a national clearinghouse of information on alternative break programs. They also provide two-year matching mini-grants to campuses to create service-learning alternative break programs. They are interested in working with campuses to create service-learning projects with farmworkers. Applications are usually due in March.

Campus Outreach Opportunity League (COOL)
1101 15th Ave. NW, Suite 203, Washington, DC 20005
202-296-7010

COOL is a national non-profit organization that promotes and supports student involvement in community service.

National Society for Experiential Education (NSEE)
3509 Haworth Drive, Suite 207, Raleigh, NC 27609
919-787-3263

NSEE is a national organization which has resources for campuses with service-learning programs.
SECTION VI:
Conclusion

SUSTAINING THE INTO THE FIELDS PROGRAM

As you establish an Into the Fields program on your campus, you should consider a strategy for ensuring its continuity in the future. Your program should have a defined structure that can be followed by the new coordinator(s) in the future. In order to ensure the sustainability of the project, you should do the following:

- Establish a governing board or committee that can make decisions on the project's direction. Have regular meetings, take written minutes, establish criteria for recruiting new members, holding elections and voting on important issues. Invite representatives of all stakeholders involved to serve on the board, such as farmworkers, farmworker advocates, faculty and students.

- Establish sound institutional arrangements between your project and academic departments, service-learning and community service organizations, and agencies and organizations that work with farmworkers.

- Begin an accessible database of contacts and projects with which you have collaborated.

- Establish a filing system that documents what types of projects have been done in the past, what types of opportunities are available in the future and problems you have encountered.

- Update brochures, program descriptions and other important information periodically.

- Develop creative and effective ways to publicize your program. Consider establishing a web-page through your University.

- Renew your program’s affiliations every year by filling out forms allowing you to maintain your status as a campus organization or subscribing to relevant newsletters and publications.

- Develop a long-term fundraising strategy, document what has worked in the past and research fundraising possibilities that can continue providing funds for more than one year.

- Establish a bank account.

- Request project participants to fill out evaluation forms to monitor activities, events and trainings coordinated by your organization. Be receptive to feedback and suggestions and make appropriate changes.

SAF’s hope is that campuses across the United States will utilize this manual and other resources to initiate and sustain action driven campus-based programs which can support farmworkers as they strive for a more just way of life. We challenge the students and faculty organizing these efforts to remember the farmworkers who continue to sustain our lives by providing the fruits and vegetables we need. Through the words and stories of farmworkers we are inspired to continue our work.
We are farmworkers, working on the land, we give life to the nation. Our hardships we suffer without mercy on this earth that God made with love, with love we give life to the field, watering blood and tears below the burning sun.

BECOMING A SAF CHAPTER

Establishing and maintaining an Into the Fields program may seem like an immense task for your group at this time. Remember that many student groups have been able to develop effective programs throughout the United States. Student Action with Farmworkers has been able to support students in their efforts by providing them with technical assistance, training, referrals to resources, assistance in establishing service-learning classes on farmworker issues and other services.

SAF is responding to student organizations that have requested assistance in developing meaningful opportunities for students to become involved with farmworkers through numerous initiatives.

SAF offers campus-based groups the opportunity to become affiliated with the national non-profit organization by becoming a SAF Chapter. Students can receive assistance in establishing an Into the Fields program that can mobilize others on your campus to learn about, educate, and work with migrant and seasonal farmworkers in your local area.

What benefits do SAF Chapters receive?

Program Development

- Technical assistance in initiating a program on your campus, organizing events and classes and coordinating a summer internship program.
- Affiliation with Student Action with Farmworkers, which is recognized nationally as an organization that provides quality opportunities for student involvement and service-learning with farmworkers. Members can establish the Into the Fields program in their own region.
- Authorization to use and adapt SAF's forms, applications, and evaluations.

Publications

- Annual subscription to SAF's newsletter, From the Ground Up.

Resources

- Access to materials in SAF's resource library.
- Access to a national database of volunteer and internship sites, as well as campuses, organizations and agencies that work with issues related to farmworkers.
- Action alerts about current farmworker issues.

Regional Symposium and Training

- Reduced registration fee for the Student Action with Farmworkers annual regional symposium and Into the Fields trainings.

What responsibilities do SAF Chapters have?

Annual Membership Dues

Each Into the Fields Member group must pay annual dues to SAF. This will cover the costs of the Into the Fields manual, From the Ground Up newsletter, and costs incurred by SAF while providing technical assistance to your campus (e.g., phone, postage).

Coordinating an educational event

Each member group will be expected to coordinate at least one educational event per semester about farmworkers. This can include hosting a film series, coordinating a panel discussion, or organizing a farmworker awareness week.
Organizing volunteer/internship opportunities

Each group is expected to assess the needs of local farmworkers and farmworker organizations to determine if there is a need for student interns from your campus. If there is such a need, then the group should initiate a volunteer/internship program with the community service center on your campus or in your community.

Contact with SAF

Each group is expected to keep SAF updated on the progress it makes toward its goals at least once a semester. A written progress report on your work should be sent to SAF by mail, e-mail, or fax.

Note

If your campus group becomes a SAF Chapter and decides to use SAF in your group's name, please designate that you are a "campus chapter of SAF", and not "SAF the non-profit organization" (e.g., your group could be named SAF-UNC).

I've always wanted to do something with my life that's a response to what I see as a real problem. That's the reason I did two internships, 'cause I wanted to see who I am in the world and what I can do with my life.

SAMPLE SYLLABUS

Into the Fields:
Farmworkers in North and South Carolina
Spring Semester, Tuesdays 6-8:30 pm

Faculty Advisors:
Public Policy & Health Education

Program Contacts:
Center for Documentary Studies
& Student Action with Farmworkers

Student Coordinator:
Student Leader

Description and Goals of Course:
The goal of this course is to educate students about the people who plant, tend, and harvest crops each year in North and South Carolina. The course seeks to have students understand the lives of migrant and seasonal farmworkers and their families. We will examine the following topics as they relate to farmworkers: health care, legal issues, education, working and living conditions, global economy, labor organizing and cross-cultural relations. The course will also include the various documentary approaches taken to explore and express the situation of farmworkers. The class will couple traditional learning techniques with activism; thus, we will not only discuss the role of students in working for social change, but begin to enact our ideas through class community service/advocacy projects.

The course has a three-fold mission:

1 to prepare/train those students who will participate in the Into the Fields summer internship program

2 to increase student awareness of farmworker issues

3 to stimulate activism relating to farmworker issues

The course will consist of twelve weekly two-hour sessions with guest speaker presentations, discussions of weekly readings, viewing of videos and required service activities or research projects. Students will be required to keep a weekly reflection journal, in which the student will integrate and analyze the material from the assigned reading and class discussions. In addition, students will be required to perform 10 hours of community service with a local agency, write a 5-7 page paper and give an oral presentation integrating the student's service experience with the class readings and discussions.

Grades will be based on attendance at class meetings, participation in class discussions, evaluation of journals, papers and presentations. Students will not receive credit if they are absent more than 2 classes.

SAMPLE SPONSORING ORGANIZATION EVALUATION FORM

Sponsoring organization: ______________________

Supervisor: ______________________

Intern name: ______________________

Job description of the intern: ______________________

Evaluate the overall performance of the intern.

Describe and evaluate the supervisor/intern meetings.

How could you have been better prepared to work with an intern?

In what ways did your involvement as an intern sponsor benefit you personally or benefit other individuals in your organization?

What problems have arisen from having an intern work with your agency? How could these be avoided in the future?

How many farmworkers would you estimate that the intern at your organization ‘served’?

How could the intern have been better prepared for their work at your organization?

Additional comments:
SAMPLE GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

A grievance procedure has been established to settle work-related matters that may arise during the Into the Fields summer internship. All three participating parties, that is, the student intern, his or her sponsoring agency/organization, and the campus coordinator, have a voice in the procedure. Any one of these parties may initiate the procedure if one believes there is due cause for grievances. Both the intern and the sponsoring agency personnel should first follow the established grievance procedure at the agency/organization. Parties can follow this grievance procedure when and if the agency/organization does not have a grievance procedure and/or when the party is not satisfied with the outcome of that procedure.

The steps in the grievance procedure are as follows:

1. Informal one-on-one meeting
If there is a conflict between the intern and sponsoring agency staff, the two parties should meet together on a one-on-one basis. The foundation of this step is common sense and a willingness to work out one's differences with each other. If the grievance is of a particularly personal and/or dangerous nature (i.e. sexual/verbal/physical harassment), the intern or the sponsoring agency staff are certainly encouraged to contact the campus coordinator directly for consultation at any point during the grievance procedure. Even if the conflict is not of this particular nature, you should inform the campus coordinator of the nature of the dispute and your attempt to resolve it one-on-one. The campus coordinator will give advice and recommendations to help resolve the situation at this stage. If you have a conflict with the campus coordinator, you should contact that person directly.

2. Letter to the intern/sponsoring agency/campus coordinator
If the results of the informal one-on-one meeting are not satisfactory, you should send a letter to the person with whom you have a dispute. If an intern has a grievance with someone other than their supervisor, a copy of the letter should be sent to the supervisor as well. In the letter, you should describe the grievance and how it came about in the clearest terms possible. Also note your attempts to settle the matter directly. A copy of this letter should be sent to the campus coordinator.

If you have a conflict with the campus coordinator, you should send a letter to that person. In the letter, you should describe the grievance and how it came about in the clearest terms possible. Also note your attempts to settle the matter directly. You should send a copy of that letter to the campus coordinator's advisor.

3. Meeting with intern/agency supervisor/campus committee
Within three days of receiving the letter, you should meet with supervisor of your sponsoring agency and with the person with whom you have a grievance. If you have a grievance with the supervisor at the sponsoring agency, you should meet with the campus coordinator rather than meeting with the supervisor for a second time.

If you have a conflict with the campus coordinator, you may request in writing a meeting with a representative of the campus committee and with the campus coordinator with whom you have a grievance. If you are unsatisfied with the outcome of that meeting, see step 6.

4. Letter to the campus coordinator
If you are unsatisfied with the outcome of the second meeting, you should submit a letter to the campus coordinator that includes a statement of the relevant facts, the action you disagree with, and the solution you would propose to settle the dispute. A copy of this letter should be sent to the person with whom you have a dispute.
5. Meeting with the campus coordinator

Within three days of receiving the letter, the campus coordinator will arrange a meeting with the grieving parties. At this meeting, the campus coordinator and the grieving parties will discuss the dispute. Within three days of this meeting, the campus coordinator will render a decision on the grievance and the necessary actions that should be taken. If the grievance is with the campus coordinator, then his/her campus advisor will render a decision.

6. Formal written letter to the campus coordinator's advisor

If you are dissatisfied with the decision of the campus coordinator pursuant to item #5, you have the right to appeal that decision in writing to the campus coordinator's advisor. The written appeal should contain a statement of the relevant facts, the action you disagree with, and the solution you would propose to settle the dispute. The campus coordinator advisor and campus committee will consider the appeal and make a final decision.

RELEASE AND DISMISSAL POLICY

In the event that the intern is still dissatisfied after all steps in the grievance procedure have been completed and the intern refuses or is unable to abide by the final decision, the intern may resign or be dismissed from the Into the Fields: Summer Internship and Leadership Development Program.

In the event that the sponsoring agency is still dissatisfied after all steps in the grievance procedure have been completed and the sponsoring agency refuses or is unable to abide by the final decision, the campus coordinator will attempt to transfer the intern to another placement.

SAMPLE INTERNSHIP APPLICATION

What is SAF?
Student Action with Farmworkers (SAF) is a nonprofit organization building a network of campus-based projects focusing on farmworker issues. SAF serves students, who need assistance developing quality service-learning programs; farmworkers, one of the hardest working yet most marginalized populations in our society; as well as agencies and community groups serving farmworkers, which need greater human resources to carry out their work. SAF supports the efforts of students organizing educational, volunteer and service-learning opportunities on farmworker issues nationwide by providing technical assistance to students and faculty. The SAF-ASU chapter is a member group of SAF and is responsible for coordinating the Into the Fileds program on this campus.

What is the Into the Fields program?
The Into the Fields program is a ten-week experiential learning internship and leadership development program. Through the Into the Fields program, college students from a variety of backgrounds have an opportunity to work with farmworkers to promote greater respect and justice for the people who supply food for our tables. Interns provide much needed skills, energy and time to organizations serving farmworkers and receive a life-changing educational experience in return. During the summer, students will work in education programs, health centers, legal services offices, and other community organizations in North and South Carolina in order to expand their capacities to reach migrant and seasonal farmworkers and their families. The intern selection process is competitive.

Goals of the Into the Fields program
- To provide farmworkers and their families with greater access to existing services
- To utilize student resources to develop new farmworker related projects
- To help create a supportive environment for the efforts of farmworkers themselves to improve their status in our society
- To link college students and farmworkers in order to develop better communication, understanding and support among people of different cultures
- To share the skills and knowledge necessary for campus and community organizing
- To increase student commitment to public service and positive social change
- To lay the foundation for a strong network of college student groups working with farmworkers for greater social justice

What are the expectations of Into the Fields interns?
The following expectations must be met by all interns. If during the summer students are unable to complete any of the basic expectations, they will not be able to continue participating in the program and will not receive the post-service scholarship.
- To work 35–40 hours per week in the agency in which interns are placed
- To participate in the internship program for the entire 10 weeks
- To meet weekly with the supervisor at their sponsoring agency
- To attend the orientation, mid and final retreats
- To participate in monthly reflection meetings with interns in the same geographic area
- To keep a weekly journal reflecting on their summer experience
- To complete a documentary project (e.g., photography, creative writing, videography)
- To demonstrate proficiency in the Spanish language
Application Checklist: (submit to the Into the Fields contact on your campus by February 14)

✓ completed application form plus a $10.00 processing fee (make checks payable to SAF-ASU)
✓ include your personal statement (no more than 3 pages)
✓ include your resume (one page, include 2 references)
✓ schedule an interview with the campus contact to be held between February 14-23

Timeline

February 14     Application deadline
February 14-23  Interviews of applicants
February 28     Selection of interns finalized
March 14        Interns notify of acceptance
April 14        Interns’ placements decided
April 30        Interns’ raised funds due
June 2-7        Orientation
June 9          On-site work begins
June 28-30      Mid Retreat
August 5        On-site work ends
August 7-9      Final Retreat
August 10       Reception

Finances Each student must raise half of their summer living expenses ($550); this amount will be matched by SAF-ASU ($550). Interns will use the total living expense ($1100) to pay for food, gas, electricity, water, phone, and other miscellaneous expenses accrued during the summer. SAF-ASU will pay for room and board during orientation and the retreats. Interns will be given $550 at Orientation and $550 at the Mid Retreat. SAF-ASU pays the airfares for students from farmworker families who will be flying to the Carolinas for the summer program. SAF-ASU will not be able to pay rent for interns who live at home, but will pay the entire rent costs for those interns for whom we arrange housing. We may be able to pay partial rent for interns who locate their own housing. If you locate your own housing and need rental assistance, you must submit a letter detailing this request and providing the cost of your rent by March 14. Each intern who successfully completes the internship, attends the orientation, retreats and reception, and who is returning to school for the next full academic year will be awarded a $1,000 post-service educational award at the Reception; interns returning to school for only one semester will receive a $500 post-service award. Eligibility for the post-service award will be determined by the graduation date indicated on the application.

Location/Housing Interns will live and work in rural, agricultural areas of North or South Carolina. In most cases, SAF-ASU will arrange summer housing. Interns' living conditions will be basic. Some interns will not have air conditioning and will live in co-ed housing. Many interns must share bedrooms and live in small groups, but some may be placed alone or in pairs with families in the community.

Travel Because interns will be in rural areas, they will drive long distances to work, as well as during work. Interns may live as far as 35 miles from their work-site and will drive even farther to visit farmworkers who live in isolated areas. We will attempt to place interns without cars with interns that have access to a car. Some agencies reimburse interns for mileage. If interns live at home or must live in a specific geographic area, their placement opportunities will be limited. Interns are responsible for travel expenses incurred for traveling to orientation, retreats and the reception.

Academic credit Interns may be able to receive credit for the summer internship. Some potential areas for credit are: Spanish, Public Health, Public Policy, Education, Religion, Sociology, Environmental Studies and Latin American Studies. Those who are interested should speak with a professor before the end of the school year about academic requirements. Interns who need additional assistance should contact the campus coordinator.

Documentary Project Each intern must complete a project which documents their summer experience and their reflections on the lives of farmworkers. Interns may do an oral history project, take photographs, write a short story or poem, produce a video, or organize a slide presentation. Interns will be provided training and technical assistance throughout the summer in order to complete their project. Final projects are used by SAF-ASU and sponsoring agencies to educate campuses and communities about farmworkers.

4. Personal Statement
On a separate page, please address the following points (use no more than 3 typed pages):
• your interest in working with farmworkers
• your interest in a specific placement and the particular program at that placement
• your personal goals for the summer
5. Resume
Please enclose a one-page typed personal resume listing your academic, work and volunteer experience, as well as the names, addresses, and phone numbers of 2 references.

6. Placement Preferences
Please check three placements in which you are interested and would be willing to work. If you are particularly interested in one placement, elaborate on your personal statement. Placement opportunities and the specific work you do will be dependent upon your knowledge of Spanish.

____ Community organizing groups support farmworkers as they initiate change in their own lives. Interns may be involved in activities such as planning a farmworker festival, collecting signatures for petitions, providing outreach to labor camps, training farmworkers about migrant housing or occupational health and safety issues, or teaching driver’s education to farmworkers.

____ Immigration assistance agencies educate farmworkers and other immigrants about immigration laws. Interns will train farmworkers about legal issues relevant to them, assist applicants in filling out immigration forms, and do follow-up with farmworkers who apply for legal residency in the United States.

____ Legal services programs provide free legal assistance to farmworkers and provide education, outreach, and advocacy on issues such as wage problems, immigration, pesticide hazards, and housing conditions. Interns will perform outreach to camps, present training sessions for farmworkers concerning their legal rights, document and report problems, and do follow-up with clients.

____ Migrant education programs provide supplementary education in public schools for migrant children who face many interruptions in their schooling. Interns will teach English as a Second Language, assist teachers in classrooms, or lead special classes in art, PE, or computers. Most interns who work in the summer school programs will also work with the school retention and theater project for migrant youth ages 12-20 called Project LEVANTE.

____ Migrant Head Start serves children of farmworkers ages six weeks to five years. Interns will work as classroom aides, assist with the coordination of parent meetings, or aid nurses in tending to the health needs of the children. Head Start is a day care-like setting.

____ Migrant health centers or health departments address the health needs of the farmworker population. Interns will educate farmworkers about pesticides, prenatal care, AIDS and other infectious diseases. Interns may also translate, teach driver’s education to farmworkers, coordinate recreation programs, transport farmworkers to clinics, organize health fairs, or work with substance abuse programs.

____ N.C. Department of Labor, Agricultural Safety and Health division, is designated to provide safe housing and working conditions for migrant farmworkers. Interns will assist in investigating field sanitation and housing conditions, distributing educational and health materials to farmworkers and collaborating on other activities.

____ Spanish-language newspaper publishes local, national and international news for the Spanish-speaking population of North Carolina. Interns will assist with writing news stories and short features articles in Spanish, taking photographs and provide support for other areas of newspaper production.

7. Geographic Location
If you must be placed in a specific geographic area for reasons such as year-long leases or living arrangements with family, attach a separate page explaining where and why you must be placed there. We will try to meet your needs, but because of limited agencies, we cannot promise to place you in a specific area. When making placements, the applicant’s interests and skills take precedence over geographic requests.

SAMPLE WAIVER OF LIABILITY FORM

I, ____________________________, am participating in the Student Action with Farmworkers-CSU Chapter Into the Fields Summer Internship and Leadership Development Program from May 26 through July 30. I understand that I will be assigned to work with migrant and seasonal farmworkers and their families through one or more agencies. I will be participating in certain activities with or at the direction of the staff of my assigned agency. I understand that it may be necessary to travel frequently to migrant labor camps and other remote sites. I agree to conduct myself in conformity with the mission and policies of SAF-CSU and the mission, policies, procedures and priorities of my assigned agency. If SAF-CSU policies and agency policies conflict, I will meet with SAF-CSU and agency staff to discuss the discrepancies between the two policies.

In consideration of the educational experience gained from my participation in this program and recognizing that I have undertaken this project voluntarily and of my own volition, I assume whatever risks to myself and others which may ensue from my actions or the actions of others. I therefore waive any claim, right, or cause of action of any kind whatsoever which may or could accrue against the SAF chapter or SAF nonprofit organization employees or agents from any liabilities, claims, damages or losses stemming from injury to person or property that arise from or in any way relates to my participation in the SAF-CSU Into the Fields program.

I have carefully read this waiver, fully understand its contents, voluntarily sign it, and realize that it will bind me, my heirs, and my personal representative.

Dear Ms. Speaker:

The Bynum State University Chapter of Student Action with Farmworkers (SAF) would again like to invite you to join us at our initial orientation for our 30 Into the Fields summer interns. The orientation will be held at the YMCA Blue Ridge Assembly in Black Mountain, North Carolina, near Asheville. It will begin Sunday evening, May 26 and will end Friday, May 31.

We would like for you to join us to speak with the interns about setting their “service and learning goals” for the summer. We would like for you to speak on Tuesday, May 28 from 9:30 - 10:45 am.

We would also like for you to coordinate a workshop Wednesday, May 29 at 5:00 pm, which focuses on how the interns can integrate writing into their summer experience for their summer documentary project. A documentary photographer will present the photography component of this workshop.

We are asking speakers to donate their time and mileage in support of our work. Because traveling to the orientation may be time consuming for you, we would like to invite you to spend the night with us before or after your speaking engagement and/or join us for meals during your stay.

Please contact us at 919-660-3652 as soon as possible if you are not able to be a presenter at our orientation or not able to present at the time requested. If you are able to join us, we will send you directions to the orientation site and further details in early May. Thank you for your continued support of our training of future farmworker advocates.

Cordially,

Dear Friend:

We write to you as a group of students from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. We want to share with you an exciting initiative which, with your help, can change the lives of college students and migrant and seasonal farmworker families right here in North Carolina.

Student Action with Farmworkers is a Durham based non-profit organization created with this mission: "to bring students and farmworkers together to learn about each other's lives, share resources and skills, improve conditions for farmworkers and build diverse coalitions working for social change." The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is a chapter of Student Action with Farmworkers and has developed a the Into the Fields: Summer Internship and Leadership Development Program.

Last summer, Into the Fields interns taught migrant children in summer school classes, led pesticide education classes in labor camps, encouraged farmworker children to stay in school, and organized a health fair for over two hundred farmworkers.

This summer, we will continue this tradition by working with different kinds of programs according to our experiences and interests: programs like Migrant Head Start Programs, English as a Second Language, health clinics, legal services centers, migrant education summer programs and community organizing projects. The summer program will also incorporate many valuable educational components including opportunities for guided reflection and strong student leadership development with "hands-on service."

We need your support to make the Into the Fields: Summer Internship and Leadership Development Program possible. Unfortunately, many students are unable to participate in summer internships like this because we must contribute to the costs of our education. Those of us on financial aid could not even consider such a program without some type of scholarship assistance or living expense stipend. The non-profit agencies where we work cannot afford to pay student interns. Into the Fields interns must raise funds to cover our living expenses for the summer.

As students, we want to commit ourselves by devoting our energy to social justice right here in North Carolina. We are relying on the generosity of congregations, small businesses and individuals for financial support to make our participation in this internship possible. We hope that you can make a donation to support our work!

Thank you very much for your help.

Sincerely,

Name

Summer Intern
